

David Emerald

David "Emerald" Womeldorff is a consultant, facilitator, executive coach, educator, speaker and author. He is co-founder of the Bainbridge Leadership Center (Bainbridge Island, WA), which is committed to facilitating emergent leadership for an integral world. As director of the Center's Collective Leadership and Self Leadership practice areas, his focus is on supporting and facilitating individuals, teams, and organizations in making a conscious shift to leading and working from a vision-focused and passion-based orientation for their lives and livelihoods. David helps clients cultivate collaborative capabilities to create sustainable change and growth and to create powerful partnerships.

"Experiencing The Power of TED (EPOT) [workshop] was the best investment I've ever made in myself... It was a life altering experience. Reading The Power of TED* gave me an awareness of how I was living in the victim orientation. EPOT brought greater depth to the awareness and that interactive group exercises gave me the tools and support I needed to shift to the creator orientation... I found a hidden door in the walls around my life and now that I have stepped through that door I will never be the same."*

He has consulted throughout the U.S. and internationally in a wide variety of industries. David has conducted over two thousand one-on-one feedback, coaching and action planning sessions in his leadership, executive and organization development roles. He has facilitated groups in areas such as strategic visioning and action planning, cross-functional team development, managing change, learning from experience, and organizational capability and competency profiling. He also has extensive experience in designing and leading educational programs, with a specialization in leadership development.

David has served as Senior Development Consultant for Bank One Corporation's Executive Leadership Development group, for which he managed and co-facilitated their Leadership Development Program (LDP). Previously, he was Consulting Director of Bank One's Learning and Leadership Development, a corporate team of education and organization development professionals, and Acting Director of Executive Education. He also managed and served on the faculty team of their Leading Strategic Change executive development program, conducted through the Darden Graduate School of Business at the University of Virginia. In addition to leading executive education experiences, David served Bank One as an internal and external consultant, facilitating numerous groups, including national conferences, in strategy and action planning.

David currently serves as an executive coach in the Executive Integral Leadership Program, an innovative program for Executive MBA students and business executives offered by University of Notre Dame's Mendoza College of Business (Executive Education). He and his wife and business partner, Donna Zajonc, are faculty members of the International City and County Managers Association (ICMA) University. David has served in leadership capacities on numerous non-profit arts, community and human service boards. He holds a Master's Degree in Applied Behavioral Science from Wright State University in Dayton, Ohio.
